Atlantic City, 1957 Professional boxers Roberto Varga and Michael Boyle were once pals growing up at St. Vincents Asylum for Boys in Chicago. Under the guidance of Father Tim, the fighting priest, they learned values, respect, responsibility, and how to fight fair. But those lessons didnt stick with Boyle. Two years after leaving St. Vincents, Boyle and Varga face-off in the ring with Boyle pounding out a bloody, lopsided decision, Varga swore wasnt on the up and up. In the seven years since, their careers have taken different paths. Guided by unscrupulous manager Tommy Domino, Boyle is positioned for a title shot against Sugar Ray Robinson. Varga, however, has struggled in a career still haunted by the bloody loss to Boyle. When the boxer scheduled to fight Boyle in Atlantic City breaks his hand two weeks before the fight, Domino scrambles for a replacement. He finds Varga toiling in a Philadelphia gym and offers him the rematch Varga has been waiting years to get. For Varga, its a chance to finally even the score, a chance to get the title shot hes always dreamed about. But Boyle is not the only formidable foe aligned against Varga. Redemption comes at a bloody price a price perhaps too high for Varga to pay
