

Heron Island—an idyllic coral cay on Australia’s Great Barrier Reef. Danny Devantier is often heard saying he has one of the ten best jobs in the world—living and working there as senior marine park ranger for the National Parks Service. Then he makes a startling life-changing discovery hidden inside a piece of rusting metal on the floor of the coral lagoon. Before he can unravel the mystery of his finding, Danny needs to deal with the pressing matter of a poaching operation that threatens to destroy the surrounding reefs in the marine park if it gets a foothold. But the marine life is not the only thing under threat; the people involved in this poaching operation are callous, twisted and utterly ruthless. Jade Bryson is a young research scientist based on Heron Island. She has devoted her career to studying the giant manta rays that, much like her, are beautiful and exotic creatures that are most at home amongst the natural wonders of the Great Barrier Reef. Jade’s deep love, compassion and admiration for the mantas are evident in all aspects of her research—but these enigmatic animals, in spite of their charisma, are under threat. Wealthy South African-born Swiss adventurer Andre Pillans and his daughter Bettina have travelled to Heron Island to search for a missing World War II tramp steamer off the Queensland coast, hoping to uncover the secrets of a sunken treasure in gold that lies buried with the crew. They have no idea just how life-changing this trip will prove to be, for their entire family. As Danny sets up a project to try to catch the poachers, Jade takes the first tentative steps towards re-establishing a relationship with her estranged businessman father, ex-diamond smuggler Joe Connelly—a relationship that will be cruelly cut short. Meanwhile, on the other side of the world, a century-old deposit in the safety deposit box of a Swiss bank by diamond magnate Cecil Rhodes awaits its rightful heir. Against the peaceful backdrop of the splendour and majesty of the world’s greatest living reef, a battle rages for the conservation of an unprotected species. Loves are spawned and lost, friendships are forged, and old scores are settled brutally. Lives united on Heron Island through a deep love and respect for marine life and the ocean will in due course return to this idyllic setting, and ultimately to the ocean, to be reunited eternally.
