Not illustrated. 1903 edition. Excerpt: ... at last. OF THE WONDERFUL EXCELLENCY OF NEGATIVE RELIGION AND NEGATIVE VIRTUE Negative virtue sets out like the Pharisee with God, I thank thee; it is a piece of religious pageantry, a jointed baby dressed up gay, but, stripped of its gewgaws, it appears a naked lump, fit only to please children and deceive fools. T is the hope of the hypocrite, it is a cheat upon the neighbourhood, a dress for without doors, for t is of no use within;t is a mask put on for a character, and as generally it is used to cheat others, tis so ignorantly embraced that we cheat even ourselves with it. In a word, negative virtue is positive vice, at least when it is made use of in any of the two last cases; namely, either as a mask to deceive others, or as a mist to deceive ourselves. If a man were to look back upon it to see in what part he could take up his nest, or lay a foundation of hope for the satisfaction of his mind as to future things, he would find it the most uncomfortable condition to go out of the world with that any man in the world can think. The reason is plain; compare it with the publican, whom such a man despises. Here is my landlord a drunkard, one of my tenants is a thief, such a poor man is a swearer, such a rich man a blasphemer, such a tradesman is a cheat, such a justice of the peace is an atheist, such a rakish fellow is turned highwayman, such a beau is debauched; but I--I that am clothed in negatives, and walk in the light of my own vanity--I live a sober, regular, retired life, I am an honest man; I defraud nobody; no man ever heard me swear, or an ill word come out of my mouth; I never talk irreligiously or profanely, and I am never missed out of my seat at church. God, I thank thee! I am not debauched, I am no...
