

The Buffalo Messenger

In 1910, the buffalo were gone and the Dakota were contained within the boundaries of the Standing Rock Indian reservation in North Dakota. Two fifteen-year-old Dakota girls get sick and run away from boarding school to find the buffalo messenger red cricket medallion that points toward miracles and healing. Their escape sets off a chain of cattle rustling, disappearances, kidnapping, and murder. These events mislead the new Indian agent into believing the symbol represents a return to the old ways and another deadly uprising like the Ghost Dance. Both tragic and humorous, The Buffalo Messenger depicts the high cost of defeat and cultural assimilation.
